

A watercolor illustration of a house entrance. A child with dark hair, wearing a blue vest over a white shirt and blue shorts, sits on the yellow steps leading up to a red door. A small orange toy car is on the steps next to the child. The house has yellow walls and blue window frames. Two potted plants with green leaves sit on the steps leading up to the door. The background shows a green lawn and a blue sky with soft clouds.

You say love can't be defined
I know it's more than being kind
I see you are meant for me
Rain fell down, back into your arms

Sometimes I wondered why
Such things had passed us by
Can you still remember how we tried
Now ever thankful for
Those days I'd spent with you
On a hot sunny day
Or a stormy weather too
